The primary purpose of the ICTP SciFabLab is to support scientific research, education and sustainable development by using modern computer-controlled tools available in the workshop structure. Other original guest projects are also welcome as long as they are meant to benefit a larger community and the designs and processes developed within the ICTP SciFabLab are made available for other individuals to use and learn from. Accepted projects should agree to follow these basic rules:

- to actively share their expertise and skills with others members of the ICTP Scientific FabLab and/or beyond;
- to publish openly their results in the literature, on-line or exhibit them in Maker events. The authors of any prototype, model or code that may result in a future production at large scales will retain their full ownership; however it is highly recommended to release prototypes, models, and/or codes developed within the ICTP Scientific FabLab as open source.
